new paleontological record from East Africa. The holotype and only specimen of the newly described Australopithecus africanus is a partial maxillary left molar (specimen KNM-ER-1454), recovered from the nearby Kibish Formation in the eastern Rift Valley of Ethiopia. This paper provides a paleontological interpretation of the KNM-ER-1454 occlusal and occlusal enamel morphologies. The morphology is interpreted as an exceptionally well-preserved, neonatal to infant specimen of an A. africanus. KNM-ER-1454 is the earliest and only known fossil hominoid to exhibit the morphology of a molar occlusal enamel that was occluding on a mobile ling
